South West cash handlers face 'anxiety' Christmas

Hundreds of cash handlers working for G4S across the South West face an 'anxiety' Christmas over a real terms pay cut.

GMB members working for G4S Cash do a difficult and dangerous job, delivering millions of pounds each week across the region to banks and businesses.

Workers have faced a pay freeze this year and now bosses have offered them a pay rise of just 1 per cent for next year.

With inflation approaching four per cent, this amounts to a massive real terms pay cut.

Arron Bevan-John, GMB Regional Organiser, said:

"Christmas should be a time when families can look forward to spending time together, not a time of stress and anxiety about how to make ends meet.

"Our members work long hours in a demanding and often dangerous environment.

"The least they deserve is a pay deal that allows them to give their family a decent Christmas.

"GMB calls on the company to listen to its workforce and table a pay offer that truly values the work they perform."
