

Translink strikes to go ahead after 'inadequate' pay offer

A transport strike across Northern Ireland will go ahead.

Thousands of Translink workers on bus and rail services will now walk out for 72 hours from 27 February.

The three frontline passenger transport unions GMB, Unite and SIPTU rejected the pay offer as inadequate following a meeting yesterday [Thursday].

Bus and rail workers in the three unions have repeatedly taken strike action to secure a cost of living pay increase.

The unions stand ready to enter further dialogue with the company if they wish to avoid the action by improving on today's offer.
