

Investment in primary school libraries will "open children's imaginations"

Reacting to the Chancellor's commitment to delivering a library in every primary school in England, Rachel Harrison, GMB National Secretary, said:

"Every child deserves access to the best books.

"And every school support worker wants to help open children's imaginations to the worlds inside books - and get them engaged in learning.

"I know our tens of thousands school support staff members will be thrilled by the chancellor's announcement. And what it means to invest in all our schools and children across the country."
